The 2018 CEFR update has completely new descriptors for the area of phonological control. The goal of native-speakerness has been rejected in favour of intelligibility. But what exactly does it mean to say that somebody is intelligible? And what are the consequences of a goal of intelligibility for pronunciation teaching in ELT in the 21st century?

Robin Walker has been in ELT since 1981 and is a teacher, trainer, materials writer, consultant and author of Teaching the Pronunciation of English as a Lingua Franca (OUP, 2010).
